I. PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

S. 2374, the Stopping Improper Payments to Deceased People Act, seeks to reduce inadvertent and improper payments by Federal agencies to individuals who are deceased and to reduce the number of living people mistakenly listed as dead by the Federal Government. The bill accomplishes these goals by requiring the Social Security Administration (SSA) to develop a process to improve the accuracy of the death data it collects and by sharing such death information with additional Federal agencies for the purposes of preventing improper payments, improving tax administration, aiding law enforcement, and for other purposes.¹

II. BACKGROUND AND THE NEED FOR LEGISLATION

S. 2374 is the result of years of congressional oversight by the Committee into improper payments by the Federal Government to people who are deceased. The Committee's first investigation resulted in a report by the then-Ranking Member of the Subcommittee on Federal Financial Management, Senator Tom Coburn, titled Federal Programs to Die for: American Tax Dollars Sent Six Feet Under.² The report identified over $1 billion paid to more than 250,000 deceased individuals in the decade preceding the report.³ The report highlighted the payment of farm subsidies, rental assistance, and stimulus support to individuals who were deceased.⁴

Of concern is the Federal Government's inability to ensure that all recipients of Federal funds are alive. The report by Senator Coburn noted a response to the Committee by then-SSA Commissioner Michael Astrue that "it is extremely expensive and may even be impossible to determine if a person is alive or dead particularly if the person died many years ago."⁵

Committee hearings and continued oversight in both the 113th and 114th congressional sessions have found that the death data available to Federal agencies is not always accurate, and that many agencies that provide Federal benefits do not have access to all of the information they need to prevent improper payments to deceased individuals.⁶ While SSA maintains a file with the death reports it receives from family members, funeral homes, states, Federal agencies, postal authorities, and financial institutions, most Federal agencies do not have access to the complete death information and instead rely on a slimmed down, less complete, and less timely version of this file that is commonly referred to as the "Death Master File."⁷

SSA became the Federal clearinghouse for death data following a 1983 amendment to the Social Security Act authorizing the agency to collect and pay for death information from individual state vital records agencies.⁸ Recognizing the value of this authorization, SSA began contracting with state vital records agencies to provide reports of death.⁹ To incentivize faster reporting of deaths by states, SSA pays these state agencies more based on the timeliness of their reporting.¹⁰ Faster reports of death allow SSA to cease benefit payments more quickly and in some cases help avoid devoting agency resources to recouping overpayments from grieving families.

When SSA receives a death report from a state vital record agency, it does not verify the report prior to entering it into the death data.¹¹ This is because states that participate in the electronic death registry program submit their reports over the Internet, and reports cannot be filed unless the fields are an exact match.¹² Therefore, these death reports are considered the most accurate and are unlikely to contain basic keystroke errors. If SSA receives a death report from a funeral home or family member, the agency enters the information manually and only verifies the death report if the individual was receiving benefits from SSA.¹³

The increased reliance on death data provided by the states through electronic death registry has resulted in improvements in SSA's death data, making it more valuable for SSA and other Federal agencies that are able to utilize this information to prevent payments to deceased people in their own programs.¹⁴ However, the law that authorized SSA to contract with the state agencies for the death reports only allowed SSA to share such information for the purpose of ensuring proper payments of benefits.¹⁵ This is why SSA creates two versions of the death data: one complete list that is provided to agencies considered to be benefit-paying agencies, and one partial list, the DMF, that does not contain the data from the state vital records agencies.¹⁶ The DMF is then sold to eligible private sector entities and other government agencies by the Department of Commerce's National Technical Information Service (NTIS).¹⁷

As a result of SSA's interpretation of which agencies are "benefit-paying" and which are not, some Federal agencies purchase a version of the death data from NTIS that is incomplete and more likely to be inaccurate than the complete death data provided to other Federal agencies.¹⁸ Furthermore, the DMF will contain fewer of the total deaths over time.¹⁹ As states and jurisdictions increasingly adopt electronic processes for providing the death reports to SSA, the state-provided death reports will become a larger percentage of the overall death reports received by SSA.²⁰

Accuracy problems with the DMF have real-world consequences. For example, the SSA Office of Inspector General (OIG) found that SSA mistakenly listed 6.5 million holders of Social Security Numbers (SSNs) as alive who were older than 112 years old, despite the fact that there was only one known living person of that age in the United States at that time.²¹ The OIG did not conduct an extensive investigation into the potential misuse of all of these 6.5 million SSNs, but did find that over a five-year period, $3.1 billion in earnings were reported under approximately 67,000 of the SSNs.²² The OIG also found that over a three-year period, there were approximately 4,000 E-Verify inquiries submitted to SSA through the Department of Homeland Security for SSNs of individuals over 112,²³ indicating that someone was attempting to obtain employment using those numbers.

In addition to concerns over improper payments resulting from an inaccurate DMF, the OIG raised concerns about SSA mistakenly listing living individuals as deceased.²⁴ According to SSA, there are nearly 1,000 living individuals each month who are mistakenly listed as deceased in the DMF.²⁵ For some of these individuals, it is a relatively simple error to correct. For others, however, the result can be devastating.²⁶

Problems persist despite continued oversight and congressional interest, evidencing the need for legislation. For example, the OIG reported again in August 2018 that it had identified hundreds more SSA beneficiaries who received benefits, despite Treasury Department records indicating they were deceased.²⁷

S. 2374 directs SSA to share the most complete death data with the Department of the Treasury's Do Not Pay system and all Federal agencies for the purposes of preventing improper payments, aiding law enforcement, and improving tax administration and collection. This requirement will end five years after the bill is enacted to allow Congress to reassess whether there is an alternative source of death data for Federal agencies. The legislation also requires that SSA develop a plan to improve the accuracy and completeness of the death data it collects and improves the use of death data by government agencies.

III. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

Senator Tom Carper (D-DE) introduced S. 2374 on February 5, 2018. The bill was referred to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

The Committee considered S. 2374 at a June 13, 2018, business meeting. The Committee favorably reported the bill, as amended by a substitute amendment, en bloc by voice vote. Senators present for the vote were Johnson, Portman, Lankford, Enzi, McCaskill, Carper, Peters, Hassan, Harris, and Jones.

IV. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BILL, AS REPORTED

Section 1. Short title

This section establishes the short title of the bill as the “Stopping Improper Payments to Deceased People Act.”

Section 2. Distribution of death information furnished to or maintained by the Social Security Administration

Subsection (a) amends Section 205(r) of the Social Security Act to require, rather than allow, SSA to compensate states for the provision of death information, and makes ensuring the completeness, timeliness, and accuracy of the death data a reason for the compensation.

Subsection (a) strikes paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of section 205(r) of the Social Security Act and reauthorizes these authorities with some technical drafting changes in new subsections (3)(A), (4), and (5). Subsection (a) also requires the Commissioner of Social Security, to the extent feasible, to provide for the use of information regarding all deceased individuals furnished to or maintained by SSA through a cooperative arrangement in order for a Federal agency to carry out any of the following purposes: (1) operating the Do Not Pay working system; (2) oversight by inspectors general; (3) to carry out tax administration or debt collection duties of the agency; or (4) for use by any policing agency of the federal government with the principle function of prevention, detection, or investigation of crime or apprehension of offenders. The agreements will require agencies to reimburse SSA for the reasonable cost of providing such information. Subsection (a) also provides that the amendments made by this subsection are repealed five years after the date of enactment.

Subsection (b) amends section 6103(d)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code to require States to have an agreement in place with the Commissioner of Social Security, instead of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in order to receive certain Federal tax return information. Current law already requires states to have an agreement with the Secretary of Health and Human Services to receive certain federal tax information. Subsection (b) changes current law so that the agreement would be made with the Commissioner of Social Security, instead of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and would allow the Commissioner of Social Security to share the state provided death information for the additional purposes in subsection (a) of this bill. It also includes an effective date 180 days after enactment.

Subsection (c) requires the SSA Commissioner, in consultation with the Treasury Secretary, to provide to Congress a report with the results of a review of potential alternative sources of death data maintained by nonfederal sources, including sources maintained by State agencies for the use by Federal agencies and partners. The report should include a recommendation regarding whether to extend the agency access to the death data provided by SSA under this bill.

Section 3. Improving the use of death data by Government Agencies to curb improper payments

This section creates a new section in the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Improvement Act of 2012 that requires the Office of Management and Budget to provide guidance to Federal agencies regarding the use of death data and to develop a plan to assist states, local governments, and Indian tribes in providing electronic death records to SSA within one year.

This section also requires a report to be submitted to Congress within one year concerning how States, local governments, and Indian tribes will improve data matching with the Federal Government with respect to the death of individuals.

Section 4. Plan for ensuring the accuracy and completeness of death data maintained by the Social Security Administration

This section requires the Commissioner of SSA to submit a plan to Congress within one year of enactment to improve the accuracy and completeness of death data maintained and distributed by SSA. The plan must include a procedure for identifying individuals who are listed as alive but older than the oldest known living person in SSA records, improved procedures for identifying and correcting erroneous records, and a process for employing statistical analysis of the death data to determine and estimate the number of erroneous records.

Section 5. Report on information security

This section requires the Commissioner of SSA to report to Congress on information security within 90 days of enactment.

V. EVALUATION OF REGULATORY IMPACT

Pursuant to the requirements of paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee has considered the regulatory impact of this bill and determined that the bill will have no regulatory impact within the meaning of the rules. The Committee agrees with the Congressional Budget Office's statement that the bill contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

VI. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 16, 2018.

Hon. RON JOHNSON,
Chairman, Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 2374, the Stopping Improper Payments to Deceased People Act.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contacts are Noah Meyerson and Matt Pickford.

Sincerely,

KEITH HALL,
Director.

Enclosure.

S. 2374—Stopping Improper Payments to Deceased People Act

S. 2374 would expand how data on deaths is used by federal and state agencies for the purpose of limiting improper federal payments. The bill would require the Social Security Administration (SSA) to share all such information with more agencies and for a broader range of purposes.

CBO estimates that implementing S. 2374 would increase discretionary costs by an insignificant amount. Enacting S. 2374 could reduce direct spending; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures apply. However, CBO estimates that such effects would probably be insignificant. The bill would not affect revenues.

CBO estimates that enacting S. 2374 would not increase net direct spending or on-budget deficits in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2029.

Under current law, SSA collects information on deaths and maintains a record of all deaths reported to the agency dating to 1936. SSA has almost 118 million death records, which include the deceased person's name, social security number, date of birth, and date of death. SSA uses those data to administer its own programs and shares the information with other agencies that administer federal benefit programs.

SSA provides the entire death file to some federal agencies, such as the Internal Revenue Service. SSA also has agreements with other agencies, such as state agencies administering the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, so that those agencies can periodically verify that program applicants and recipients are not included in those death records. The Department of Commerce makes the Death Master File (DMF), a subset of those data, available to nongovernmental organizations after the department certifies that they have a legitimate purpose for using the data; for example, preventing fraud. The DMF, which has information on more than 96 million deceased individuals, excludes death data reported by states, because SSA may share data on deaths reported by states only in limited circumstances, such as to agencies that pay federal benefits. (A subset of the DMF, which is available to the general public through the Department of Commerce, excludes both death data reported by states and data on deaths within the past three years.)

S. 2374 would require SSA to share its complete death records with more agencies and for a broader range of purposes. It also would make the complete death file, rather than only the DMF, available to the Do Not Pay program—a program administered by the Department of the Treasury that allows agencies to check various databases before making payments in order to identify ineligible recipients. Hence, there would likely be more frequent checks against the more complete file than occurs under current law. Those provisions would expire five years after enactment of the bill. The bill would require the director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to recommend, within four years of enactment, whether to extend the broader data access.

The expanded availability of information on deaths would probably reduce the amount of mistaken payments. However, large benefit-paying agencies generally already use the complete death file, so CBO expects that enacting the bill would not reduce the number of payments to deceased people by a significant amount. In addition, the Department of the Treasury has mechanisms to recover improper payments that are identified at a later time, so many such payments are already recovered. For those reasons, CBO estimates that enacting S. 2374 would reduce direct spending by an insignificant amount.

The bill also would require the director of OMB to review alternative sources of death data and report its findings to the Congress, to provide guidance to relevant agencies on how to access death data, and to develop a plan to assist state and local governments in providing death data to the federal government. However, under current law and OMB guidance, agencies already are required to assess their programs for risk and initiate program improvements to reduce and eliminate payment errors. In addition, CBO expects that many options to eliminate improper payments have been reviewed and analyzed by OMB and agencies. Thus, CBO estimates that implementing those provisions would increase agency administrative costs by an insignificant amount.

S. 2374 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are Noah Meyerson and Matthew Pickford. The estimate was reviewed by H. Samuel Papenfuss, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.
